

Hall Appears on National TV Live Broadcast

Bainbridge College communication professor and bestselling author Wynton Hall appeared on C-SPAN2's nationally televised live broadcast "Book TV" for a panel discussion on "Great Books to Read in College."

Appearing with him on the panel a George Washington University in Washington, D.C., were Regnery publisher Marji Ross and Jed Donahue, senior editor at Crown Forum, a division of Random House.

"It was an honor to share the stage with Jed and Marji," said Hall of the Aug. 4 event. "I particularly enjoyed fielding questions from the bright students who made up our audience."

The approximately 280 students in the audience were part of a national conference hosted by Young America's Foundation, a student organization devoted to furthering the ideals of individual freedom, a strong national defense, free enterprise, and traditional values.

"At Bainbridge College we have many aspiring young writers. When students ask me how to improve their craft I always tell them the same thing: 'great writers are great readers. Read great books!'"

During the C-SPAN broadcast, Hall recommended that college students read nonfiction classics such as Allan Bloom's The Closing of the American Mind, Richard Weaver's Language is Sermonic, and William F. Buckley's seminal work, Miles Gone By.

Hall, 32, is the author or coauthor of four books, including his latest, The Right Words: Great Republican Speeches that Shaped History. The book tells the behind the scenes history of the famous GOP orations from the likes of Presidents Abraham Lincoln, Teddy Roosevelt, Dwight Eisenhower, and Ronald Reagan.

Professor Hall's work has been published in the New York Times, USA Today, Washington Times, and in numerous other publications and has appeared on over 75 radio programs throughout the nation, as well as international media. He was interviewed in July for a British Broadcasting Corp. (BBC) documentary that will air across Europe. He has taught at BC since 2002.
